When the Parkhurst then saw they

When the Parkhurst men saw they were noticed by the detectives they went away. On Feb. 16, Detectives McManus and Jacobs received by express a package, which contained $50. It was at once returned intact.

The detectives on receiving the money said they suspected they were the victims of a "put up" job. The money was received at their homes by their wives and receipted for by them. Accompanying the money was a letter susposed to be written by Burgiar Liss, who said the burgiary at 8 Deiancay street did not pan out as well as they (the detectives thought, and requested that they would stop searching for him and accept $50 for their trouble.

They located Liss, followed him about and saw they also were being shadowed by Parkhurst men.

The detectives say they reported the plot to entrap them to Inspector McLaughin, who told them to play out the game until the end. They arrested Liss and arraigned him to-day.

On the Saturday after receiving the money the detectives met Liss at Seventh street and Avenue B. The detectives feigned to be afraid of Liss, they say, and asked him why he was putting up a "job" on them. Liss denied it, and said he committed the burgiary at a Delancey street, knew the detectives were in the neighborhood at the time and sent them the money so they would not arrest him. The detectives told Liss they did not believe he had committed the burgiary. They met Liss five times after that and each time asked Liss what he was trying to do.

On Saturday Detective Jacobs saw Liss in front of his house in Avenue B. "Look," said Jacobs, pointing to two Parkhurst men on the opposite side of the street. "What are those men doing there unless you are putting up a job on me?"

"Yes I am putting up a job on you." finally admitted Liss, so Jacobs alleges.

"Yes I am putting up a job on you," "and I did it for revenge. You sent me back to Pittsburg and it cost me $300 in cash and my jeweiry to get out of it." Jacobs alleges that Liss promised to leave the city if Jacobs would supply him with money to go. At first he demanded $500, which was raised to $1,000, and finally was compromised for $550 and two complete outfits. Liss said he would leave for Europe on the City of Paris. The steamer sailed yesterday. On Monday, Detectives Jacobs and McManus met Liss by appointment at yell street and Bowery. Liss then said the Parkhurst men could not do any it is alleged that he made another demand for money, whereupon he was placed under arrest.
